About OHECC

The Ohio Higher Education Computing Council (OHECC) brings together Information Technology (IT) organizations and professionals within institutions of higher education in the state of Ohio. It was founded at the University of Cincinnati in the early 1970s. Ball State University and University of Louisville have since joined the organization. Historically, the Council has held two conferences each year, in the spring and the fall, with locations rotating between participating institutions.

Beginning in 2001-2002, OHECC leadership decided to hold only one conference in the spring. And beginning in 2003, OHECC leadership decided to institute a 6-member cross-university program planning committee with rotating membership to put together the annual conference program.

At the annual OHECC conference, presentations are made by computing professionals, faculty and others addressing topics ranging from current use and delivery of technology within higher education to future trends and prospects. Sponsoring vendors of computing hardware, software, communications and networking devices and other technologies are invited to exhibit and demonstrate the use of their products in higher education.

Typical attendance is between 150 and 200 participants from around 20-30 institutions. Institutions may range in size from small private colleges to large universities.

WELCOME

Miami University is pleased to welcome you to OHECC 2004. During this year's conference, "Technology - Teaming with Possibilities", we'll explore the many opportunities technology provides to enrich the higher education experience and how through teamwork and collaboration we can exploit the opportunities.

OHECC 2004 itself sets a new standard of teamwork and collaboration for OHECC conferences. It has been planned by a newly established cross-university program committee and brings together presenters and roundtable moderators from many institutions. Our thanks to the OHECC program committee, OHECC 2004 presenters and our OHECC 2004 corporate sponsors for their invaluable contributions to the OHECC 2004 conference.

We hope you enjoy the conference!
