You have certain rights under the federal Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPPA) related to the confidentiality of your personal health information. Information about these rights, as well as information about how the health plan may use or disclose your medical information for treatment, payment for services, or business operations can be found in the Notice of Privacy Practices. If a use or disclosure is not outlined in the Notice of Privacy Practices, the health plan must obtain your permission before releasing this information.
